Adaptive Sports Center’s new Kelsey Wright building, which will open in a week’s time, is being built with hands free, customizations and accessibility in mind, a new building with climbing features, goals advocating adaptive sports, new approaches to mobility in mind.

Since the building’s groundbreaking, ASC has teamed together these goals, which include:

The Adaptive Sports Center, which specifically serves the blind and visually impaired, has been working with ASC since 2016. This group works closely with the Adaptive Sports Center, which includes the Adaptive Sports Center, Adaptive Sports Center, and Adaptive Sports Center.

"It’s been an incredible journey," said Adaptive Sports Center’s founder and executive director, Kendra Walker. "Adaptive Sports Center is working closely with ASC and Adaptive Sports Center on their adaptive sports projects, and not just about adaptive sports challenges, and have taken those ideas back to reality. It’s priority is to see the idea come to fruition, and that’s what’s so exciting.

"To see all of this work, they’re never to be old just to be great," said Walker. "We also see the entire town of Crested Butte, and the students appreciate it so much more because they’ve had such a great perspective on the new building."

Duda said, "Each time the students have to adapt to that specific lodging situation. To now have the Kelsey Wright building, the students appreciated it so much more because they’ve had such a great perspective on the new building."

"The Expedition School’s students, ages 16 to 21, are excited to be there to meet new people every step of the way. "It’s been such a game changer for our students," said The Expedition School’s founder and executive director, Kendra Walker."

Since the building’s July 2 grand opening, ASC has hosted three groups this summer, including The Expedition School, which specifically services the blind and visually impaired, has been working with ASC since 2016. "I’ve been to Crested Butte about eight times now, two winter trips and at least six summer trips. I love getting out there, skiing and being outdoors and all the summer activities," he said.

In the past, The Expedition School stayed in a different location each time they visited Crested Butte. Duda said, "That’s how the students have to adapt to that specific lodging situation. To now have the Kelsey Wright building, the students appreciated it so much more because they’ve had such a great perspective on the new building."

For Main, the favorite feature of the new building included the "very comfortable beds" and "the fanciest toilet I’ve ever seen."

Main’s favorite feature of the new building, Duda said her students are "so tickled and privileged and honored. They’re so tickled and privileged and honored."

The Adaptive Sports Center’s new Kelsey Wright building is both beautiful and functional. That was a really big moment for me sitting there by the fire and talking about the day. "It was a really big moment for me sitting there by the fire and talking about the day."

"It started raining really hard and it was really hectic setting up camp—that was a new experience," Main said. "But we biked around town, we biked to the Farmers Market, we biked to the Art Center, we biked to the post office. We really had this opportunity to work with Adaptive Sports Center and seeing them succeed, absolutely."

"The Expedition School will have the opportunity to test out the new Kelsey Wright building in the winter," said Duda. "It’s an incredible journey," said Adaptive Sports Center’s founder and executive director, Kendra Walker. "It’s an incredible journey, and that’s what’s so exciting."

Adaptive Sports Center is the only such organization in the United States, serving the blind and visually impaired, that specifically serves the blind and visually impaired. It’s priority is to see the idea come to fruition, and that’s what’s so exciting.
